Foreword

This is the fourth of a projected four volumes of the Dictionary of British Arms – Medieval Ordinary, an Ordinary being an arrangement of arms according to their design. This Ordinary covers the period from the beginnings of heraldry in the twelfth century to 1530 – the end of the medieval period for English and Welsh heraldic chronology, as the county surveys known as ‘Heralds’ Visitations’ started then.

Work on this Ordinary originally began in 1940 under the direction of Sir Anthony Wagner, Garter King of Arms (as he later became). The Society of Antiquaries appointed him joint General Editor of the Dictionary of British Arms in 1940 and he was sole General Editor from 1944 until his death in 1995. Volume One was published in 1992, Volume Two in 1996 and Volume Three in 2009, and I am delighted that the fourth and last volume is being published in 2014.

The origins of this Ordinary lie in a card index containing approximately 114,000 cards. The decision to produce a medieval Ordinary using computers was taken in 1979, and the work has been overseen by the Croft Lyons Committee of the Society of Antiquaries, which was itself created as the result of a bequest to the Society by Lieutenant-Colonel G.B. Croft Lyons in 1926 for the encouragement of the study of heraldry, and which is also responsible for the Aspilogia series, presenting Rolls of Arms chronologically.

The work producing this volume has been done largely at the College of Arms. Garter King of Arms has been responsible for the structure of the Ordinary. Janet Grant, also of the College of Arms, and Kate Owen, the Publications Manager of the Society of Antiquaries, produced a brief for the computer software required and a debt of gratitude is owed to Dr Trevor Chalmers, the computer software consultant responsible for the computer program. Finally, the dedicated hard work of entering and editing more than 20,000 cards has been done by Sarah Flower. This has created the present volume and made available the work of many scholars who have worked on the project since 1940.

History of the Project since 2009

Volume One of the Dictionary of British Arms – Medieval Ordinary was published in 1992, Volume Two in 1996 and Volume Three in 2009. The history of the project up to 2009 is narrated in articles in those volumes. In January 2001 I completed working out the structure of the Ordinary for Volume Three and arranged the cards in a logical sequence. In May 2001 I continued the work on the structure of the Ordinary, moving on to Volume Four, and completed working out the structure in August 2005. The work was done almost entirely on my train journeys to Lancaster and back on Fridays and Sundays, which provided several uninterrupted hours each week to concentrate on the work. Train delays were a bonus. In February 2005 Sarah Flower took on the task of compiling the text of Volume Three, which was completed in May 2008. She hoped to begin work on Volume Four in April 2010 but the combination of being stranded in America due to the eruption of an Icelandic volcano and my appointment on 1 April as Garter King of Arms meant that there was some delay to Volume Four getting under way. The work started properly in December 2010 after I was able to move into Garter House.

Problems mentioned in the history of the project in Volume One, namely that the handwriting on some of the cards was almost illegible and that the compilers had not all been consistent in the way they blazoned the arms and recorded the sources, were common to all four volumes. The editorial work which had to be done was therefore considerable. A concentrated effort by Sarah Flower, on whom the main burden of the work fell, led to the completion of the work by September 2013. This volume of the Dictionary is compiled from more than 20,000 cards in twenty-seven card index boxes.

Structure of the Ordinary

In a codicil to his will dated 5 January 1926 and proved in the same year Lieutenant-Colonel G.B. Croft Lyons wrote: ‘I wish that a new edition of Papworth’s Ordinary should be prepared. And that in order that such edition can be generally useful I desire that the blazon of the Arms in such new edition shall follow the style of blazon in the present edition and that the new forms affected in recent years by certain writers be not adopted but that the blazon be full and exact and such that any person can as far as may be understand it.’

Papworth’s Ordinary of British Armorials was published in 1874 and was the work of two men, John Woody Papworth (1820–70), who edited the first 696 pages, and Alfred William Morant (1828–81), who edited the remaining 429 pages from material left by Papworth. Papworth’s Ordinary has no date restrictions. For the new Ordinary it was decided as early as 1941 that priority should be given to the Middle Ages, which, for heraldic purposes, ended in 1530 when the county surveys known as ‘Heralds’ Visitations’ began.

Volume One of the Dictionary of British Arms – Medieval Ordinary covered pages 1 to 224 of the old Papworth, Volume Two covered pages 224 to 554, Volume Three covered pages 554 to 835 and the present and last volume in this series covers pages 835 to 1125. This volume alone covers that part of Papworth edited solely by A.W. Morant, which is noted for introducing a greater degree of subdivision. All four volumes cover the beginnings of heraldry in the twelfth century down to approximately the year 1530.

The initial key to the structure of the present work is Papworth’s Introduction to his Ordinary in which he states: ‘The Plan of the Work is simply thus: the arms are blazoned (i.e. technically described) and are arranged in alphabetical order by the names of such of the respective charges as are first mentioned in the blazon; so that the inquirer has but to blazon the coat, and the first charge that he names shows under what title in this Dictionary the coat is to be sought ... some of the charges, such as the ordinaries and others much in use, form heads so comprehensive, that several divisions and subdivisions became indispensable: there it will be seen that further alphabetical arrangements have been observed ... This part of the plan will be best learned by inspection.’ As Papworth suggested, the best method of understanding the structure of his Ordinary is by inspecting it and this applies to the present Ordinary, which can be understood most easily by examination of the index of headings which immediately precedes the text of the Ordinary.

The achievement of Papworth as compared to other compilers of ordinaries was that he saw the necessity of exact order in the entries. He devised a mode of classification that could extend from the simplest to the most elaborate coats where each had one and only one correct position controlled by the blazon. As the blazon controls the structure there are cases where an ambiguous coat in Papworth occurs more than once blazoned differently.

Papworth's underlying principle is that once grouped under the first named charge the remaining charges in each blazon are to be considered in their degree of remoteness from the field or the centre of it. Those that are further from the centre of the shield are considered before those nearer the centre.

In a section such as On a pale between ... and On a saltire between the pale and saltire as the first mentioned charges determine that the entries appear under pale and saltire. The charges which the pale and saltire are between are furthest from the centre of the shield so they next control the order of the entries rather than the charges on the pale or saltire. All coats of On a saltire between four escallops are grouped together being arranged in an alphabetical order of the charges on the saltire. Arms with one greater degree of complication such as On 1 saltire between ... and on chief are placed under the general heading of saltire and then arranged initially by the charges on the chief as being furthest from the centre of the shield.

Papworth gave a few references to sources; most ordinaries give none. The intention of the present Ordinary is to give a source for every entry. Any work compiled out of a card index of more than 100,000 cards written by many hands over fifty years may contain errors. By quotation of the original source such an error should be discovered by the user. When Volume Two of this series was published in 1996 Volume Three of the Aspilogia series, namely Professor Gerard J. Brault's The Rolls of Arms of Edward I, had not been published. This occurred in 1997. The Croft Lyons Committee decided that for the eighteen rolls of arms of the reign of Edward I (1278–1307) the original numbers on the card of the shield in the rolls should be retained rather than those assigned by Professor Brault. Many rolls are only known from later copies which differ from one another in their order and content. The numbers used here are in some rolls different from Brault's numbering but as the numbers here are part of the numerical order used in Volumes One, Two and Three, it was decided they should be retained.

Although Papworth's principal is the basis of the Ordinary here, an exact position is controlled more by linear appearance than in Papworth's Ordinary, where the colour of the field and of the first charge determine position within a larger general group.

An examination of the list of headings in the present volume shows that plain saltires on a plain field are followed by plain saltire on a patterned field and then by modified saltires. These are arranged alphabetically by the form of modification, with the exception that saltires engrailed do not come between saltires embattled and saltires flory and are placed at the end of the section entitled 'saltire modified'.

There are two reasons for this. The first is that saltires engrailed cover five pages whereas those otherwise modified occupy two pages so that a five-page section dividing the other modified saltires could be misleading. The second is that the structure of the Ordinary only allows for three sizes of heading. The principal head under which saltire engrailed appears is 1 saltire, the second heading is saltire modified and the third and lowest size of heading is saltire engrailed. Consequently if further degrees of subdivision help the user such as plain field saltire engrailed, patterned field saltire engrailed and saltire engrailed patterned with headings beneath each of those it helps to move them to the end of the section and make them secondary headings to accommodate headings beneath them.

Removing charges from their normal alphabetical position because of the greater frequency can be seen in lions preceding other beast, lions rampant preceding other lions and eagles preceding other birds. This decision was taken when the cards were originally arranged as an expanding card index in boxes. All cases of one bird whether an eagle or something else precede two birds. Roses similarly precede other flowers and lion's heads and leopard's faces (i.e. Lion's heads affronty) precede those of other beasts. Heads that are coupé at the neck and therefore shown with a clean cut immediately precede those that are erased at the neck and have a jagged edge but only within each blazon so that where two coats are identical but for this they will be next to each other. There are many cases where it was not specified whether a head was coupé or erased. Whilst it is possible to check sources in the College of Arms, it has not been possible to check all sources.

A pierced mullet and a voided lozenge (mascle) are not treated as different charges from a plain mullet and lozenge. Mullets are defined as stars of five points with straight limbs. Those with six straight limbs are called mullets of six points and not separated from those of five points. Consequently Argent a Mullet Gules is followed by Argent a pierced Mullet Gules, then Argent a Mullet of six points Gules comes next, followed by Argent a pierced Mullet of six points Gules. In some sources such as J.H. Stevenson's Scottish Heraldic Seals (1940) the word star is used. Unless otherwise stated this has been interpreted to mean a mullet of five points and not an estoile, that is a star with wavy limbs, which is listed separately.

Sprigs, branches and tree trunks are grouped with trees as they have a closer linear appearance to them than to single leaves, which are a separate category between lamp holders and legs, whereas trees come between torches and trellis. 3 trees are followed by 3 branches and then three tree stumps.

No monster has been singled out for special treatment as occurring with greater frequency than other monsters. An unidentified monster is followed by a cockatrice, next come a dragon, griffin, harpy, mermaid, sagittary, sea horse, unicorn and finally wyvern. Two and three monsters are similarly alphabetically arranged, with some monsters such as centaurs and sea dogs only appearing under 3 monsters. Although different species of fish appear in arms they are not categorised by their species but by their position. Fish in an unspecified position are followed by those that are haurient (i.e. vertical or breathing), then naiant or swimming horizontally, naiant on waves and finally in a knot.

The purpose of the Dictionary is to arrange the materical logically and not to edit it to the extent of creating uniformity in such cases or in the spelling of surnames. Fish trap, weel and weer are all used to describe the same object and are grouped together but they are not standardised so that only one term of blazon is used. Similarly, crozier, mace, palmer's staff, ragged staff and shepherds's crook all remain as different terms of blazon under staff. This illustrates the possible variety of blazon which has been retained. There is nevertheless some standardisation of words, so millrind is used in preference to fer de moline and tower is used to define turrets on a castle, which is used for the main structure. The terminology list which precedes the index of headings gives both abbreviations and the term used for classification of a charge. Hedgehog sic sub urchin means that the word hedgehog can be used, but in any group it will appear under the heading ‘urchin’. Similarly, parrot sic sub popinjay leads the user to popinjay as a heading when looking for parrots. In neither case is there any indication that hedgehogs and urchins are beasts or that parrots and popinjays are birds. That is left to the common sense of the user, who will soon discover that all beasts are together within each heading, as are other groups such as birds and flowers. In Volume One demi-lions were extracted to form a group before lions. The same pattern has been followed in subsequent volumes where demi-lions precede lions and demi-dogs precede dogs, but there is no general category of demi-beasts. Beasts, birds or other charges facing to the sinister are placed immediately after the same coat with the charges facing to the dexter. Two lions passant to the sinister therefore follow two lions passant to the dexter of the same blazon. The one exception is where the two charges face one another such as two lions combatant for which there is a separate heading. Similarly, charges reversed follows the identical blazon where they are not reversed.

The position of the lion in Volume One, which covers beasts alone, follows an alphabetical sequence with the exception that lions rampant as the most numerous are dealt with before the less frequent lions couchant, passant, salient and statant, which follow in that order. There is one other exception which is that lions guardant, that is with the head turned towards and looking out at the spectator, have been treated as a separate group whether rampant, passant or in some other position. Lions guardant follow lions statant and are subdivided into rampant guardant, passant guardant, and salient, sejant and statant guardant. Lions regardant, that is with their heads turned to look back over their shoulder, follow lions guardant. In each section untinctured coats, of which there are a considerable number derived largely from collections of seals, precede tinctured ones derived from rolls of arms and other coloured sources. Unidentified beasts and birds follow lions and eagles at the head of any group of other beasts or birds. This same order is followed in Volumes Two, Three and Four, where lions are subsidiary to Ordinaries such as chevrons, crosses, fesses and saltires but the rampant lions still come first, before the other lions and beasts.

The English system of cadency marks is thought to have been invented by John Writhe, Garter King of Arms, in about 1500. After 1500 a label in non-Royal heraldry denotes an eldest son in the lifetime of his father. Before 1500 the label did not necessarily indicate this and there are many instances of arms differenced by a label. Three fish and a label follows three fish without a label so that all coats of three fish with a label are grouped together.

This volume covers all coats where a pale, pile or saltire is the principal charge. It commences with 1 fetterlock and concludes with 6 wreaths, covering all blazons where the principal charged such as a flower, foil, maunch and mullet fall alphabetically between fetterlock and wreath.

Within the Saltire between ... section it does not matter whether the saltire is plain or modified. All saltires between 4 crescents are grouped together so that first there are plain fields and plain saltires between 4 crescents, then patterned fields if there were any between them, next there are patterned saltires and finally modified ones between 4 crescents.

The blazon follows that used by Papworth and is 'full and exact', as required by Croft Lyons. There can be a problem of meanings shifting. For example, what in the fourteenth century would be called a pale indented might today be blazoned five fusils conjoined in pale. In this volume they are grouped together under the heading of 1 pale modified and are then blazoned as 1 pale of 3, 4 or more fusils. The compilers of the cards were instructed to use an unambiguous modern blazon applicable to the drawings of the Arms, and the Ordinary must be used with this in mind, though occasionally compilers did not follow instructions. Where the term a Royal tressure is used it is assumed that a double tressure flory counterflory is intended.

Surnames are reproduced exactly as they occur in the original source, even if scarcely intelligible or erroneous, as some errors led to later unwarranted use of arms. In this the Ordinary follows Papworth. Variant spellings of a name tend to be grouped together so that nothing should be lost by repetition of medieval errors, or different forms of the same name such as Eyncourt and Deincourt. The index of names is computer-generated and covers all names given as the principal name. It does not pick up names in editorial comment. In cases where more than one name is given in the original entry repetition of an entry with the alternative name sometimes occurs so that both are indexed. Misleading entries are also occasionally repeated with different names.

Because names are indexed as they occur in the original source, the index of names should not be used as an indication of the number of entries for a particular family. Terbock, Torbock and Turbok are all variants of the same name, which appear and are brought together in the Ordinary if not in the index. Usually at least one entry gives something close to the most frequently used modern spelling of a surname, though Chiribrond, Jelybrond, Jehibion and Gellibrand are not accompanied by Gillibrand, which is the current spelling.

As already noted, the index of headings and the text contain three sizes of heading. Three degrees of headings were imposed in the interests of simplicity, though there are occasions when a hierarchy of four or more would have been preferable. As far as the structure of individual entries is concerned, the blazon is followed by the surname and then by Christian or other names and/or a place of residence. Next comes the source. Editorial comment follows in round brackets and square brackets are used for other material such as speculative attributions, identifications or tinctures. Many abbreviations are used and reference should be made to the list of them. In English heraldic blazon adjectives are postpositive. A red engrailed saltire is blazoned 'a saltire engrailed Gules'. Blazons follow this form but the headings do not necessarily. 'Patterned field plain pale' is preferred to 'Field patterned pale plain'.

Many people have worked on the Ordinary, though none for as long as Sir Anthony Wagner who was a member of the Croft Lyons Committee of the Society of Antiquaries of London from 1937 till his death in 1995 and General Editor of the Dictionary of British Arms from 1940 till 1995. His influence is as important on the structure as in other areas and for those who wish to study the structure in greater detail reference should be made to his articles in the Antiquaries Journal, volumes 21 (1941), 299–322, and 23 (1943), 42–7, and to a progress report written for contributors dated 26 February 1948. These show the development of the structure, though some modifications have been made since 1948. Like Papworth's Ordinary, it is best mastered by inspection and use.

Compilers

By way of acknowledgement of the work of all those who wrote the index cards for the Dictionary, we include brief biographical notes, compiled from reference books, obituaries or personal knowledge. Unfortunately, so long after the groundwork has been completed, it has not been possible in some cases to discover more than the compiler's name. The biographies have been kept as short as possible, but nevertheless contain a career summary and an indication of the journals or publications from which further information might be obtained.

GHA

Askew, Gilbert Horden, FSA (1893–1950), of Potters Bar, formed the Enfield Chase Archaeological Society with AM, CRG and COM to compile details of monuments in the churches of Middlesex and Hertfordshire. One-time Keeper of Coins and a member of the Council of the Society of Antiquaries of Newcastle upon Tyne, he contributed papers to Archaeologia Aeliana (an important one on Northumbrian pipes) and The Numismatic Chronicle.

MA

Ayearst, Dr Morley, MA, Ph.D (1899–1983), of Springs, New York, Professor Emeritus, Sometime Acting Chairman of the Department of Government and Director of Evening Studies, Square College, New York University; 1950–9 specialised in the study of the British Commonwealth and British West Indies.

FA

Ayling, Frederick (1896–1965) of Lee, London, genealogical researcher at the College of Arms, compiler HMC Dorset.

EPB

Baker, Revd Eric Paul, MA, FSA (1906–82), Vicar of Great Milton, Oxfordshire, published a number of papers on English and Continental iconography and ecclesiology, and bequeathed to the Society of Antiquaries his small working library and a fund for the benefit of the Morris Committee.

ENB

Baynes, Edward Neil, FSA (1861–1951), excavated the Din Lligwy site in Anglesey, was co-founder of the Anglesey Antiquarian Society, served on the Council of the Cambrian Archaeological Association and the Society of Antiquaries, and was an original member of the Ancient Monuments Board for Wales.

RNB

Bloxam, Richard Noel (1887–1969), of Warneford, Oxfordshire, schoolmaster.

Sources

Alphabetically by abbreviation

The list of sources includes only those referred to in this volume. At the end of each entry the initials of the person who compiled the index cards, where known, are given in brackets. Comprehensive records of the sources and compilers were not maintained and it has not always been possible to give full particulars. The editors would like to thank all those who have assisted in improving the list with details of the present whereabouts of sources. In particular they would like to thank Mrs Ann Payne, FSA, sometime Manuscript Librarian, British Library; Bernard Nurse, FSA, lately Librarian, Society of Antiquaries; R.C. Yorke, Archivist, College of Arms; Henry Beckwith, Secretary of the Committee on Heraldry, New England Historic Genealogical Society; and the late John Goodall, FSA.

Where an abbreviation is marked with an asterisk* the source is listed in Sir Anthony Wagner's Catalogue of English Medieval Rolls of Arms published as Aspilogia I (1950) to which there are additions and corrections in Aspilogia II (1967). These give details of original Rolls of Arms and their various copies.

Manuscripts previously described as in the British Museum (BM) are now referred to as in the British Library (BL) in the list of sources. References such as BM Harl MSS have, however, been retained in the text of the Ordinary and not changed to BL Harl MSS.

Abbreviations and selected word list

The list of abbreviations includes abbreviations with the words in full and vice versa. The full version has been omitted if its inclusion would have placed it next to its abbreviation. The alphabetisation of the list ignores apostrophes, hyphens, numerals and spaces.

‘Sic’ indicates that the word is used in the form given.

‘Sic sub’ indicates that the word may be used in this form but in a section headed by the alternative word.

‘Say’ indicates that the alternative word is used in preference, particularly in headings, but that the use of the second word is not necessarily precluded.

The spelling of French past participles has been anglicised, e.g. ‘semy’ rather than ‘seme’.
